Abstract:

The global spread of English as a lingua franca challenges TESOL practitioners to rethink their classroom practices (Galloway & Rose, 2015). To elaborate, they must consider whether they prepare learners to use English with socioculturally-diverse English users (Rose & Galloway, 2019). Unfortunately, prior research has pointed out that TESOL practices in many countries (e.g., curricula, materials, assessment, or foreign teacher recruitment) still reflect an entrenched native speakerism ideology. As a result, it is urgent to change TESOL practices to correspond to English use in the globalized world. Changing TESOL practices requires active involvement from teachers, who are in a vital position to bring change into the classrooms (Matsuda, 2017). This study attempted to contribute to the extant knowledge of the teacher education research sphere by situating it in the Global Englishes paradigm since it is an emergent research area that has gained considerable interest in the TESOL literature.
