KEYNOTE ADDRESSES

"The Future Role of Learned Societies in Higher Education Policy"

Stanley N. Katz, President, American Council of Learned Societies

Thursday, November 2, 4:45 p.m., Floral Ballroom

In his keynote address, Stanley Katz will provide perspectives on educational policy in higher education, its existence (or lack thereof) in and impact on the postsecondary academic environment of the future.

His comments will encourage us to recognize distinctions between educational policy and that which often passes for it, reflect on our roles as policy researchers and framers, and acknowledge the bases upon which postsecondary policy reform must be built.

Kathryn Moore, Michigan State University, will respond to Katz's comments from an institutional policy perspective, and Edward Hines, Illinois State University, will reflect on the message from a state and federal policy viewpoint.

"Some Thoughts on the Future of Higher Education Research"

Patrick T. Terenzini, The Pennsylvania State University

Friday, November 3, 5:00 p.m., Floral Ballroom

In his presidential address, Patrick T. Terenzini will offer his views on some needed directions—modest and major—in higher education as a field of study as we move towards the 21st Century. Some of those redirections include higher education research and policy analysis, two-year institutions, under-studied learners, the international scene, and current and future audiences for research on higher education.

William Trent, University of Illinois Urbana-Champaign, will react to Terenzini's address from a policy perspective, while Sheila Slaughter, University of Arizona, will frame her remarks from a research perspective.

"The Globalization of Higher Education and ASHE: Future Issues, Current Challenges"

Panelists: Marcela Mollis, University of Buenos Aires

Philip Altbach, Boston College

Anna Osterczuk, Warsaw School of Economics

Chair: Elaine El-Khawas, American Council on Education

Saturday, November 4, 4:00 p.m., Floral Ballroom

The topic of this panel is how educational, social, and economic developments around the world affect our daily work in higher education. Panelists from vastly different countries will address this topic both to explore the influences of US higher education on other countries and the influences of these other countries on US higher education. The panelists will each offer an overview of the perspective from their own country and then participate in a discussion on the role ASHE and its members can play in the study of the function of higher education in global development. The audience will be asked to participate, as well, and to offer their own perspectives on the role ASHE should play in studying, understanding, and participating in the globalization of higher education.

Don Westerheijden, University of Twente, and Ken Kempner, University of Oregon, will respond to the panel's remarks based on their own research on international issues and their efforts with the International Conference over the last several years.
