Dr. Paul Koegel, director (BHS), Dr. Jeffrey Wasserman, director (RAND Health). As a RAND Associate, participate in all aspects of project and proposal design, implementation, data collection and analysis. Projects focus on testing theories about the mechanisms of network formation, evolution and dynamics through computationally intensive statistical analyses and applying theoretical findings in policy-based research.

RAND Methods Center for Applied Network Analysis and Systems Science, 2013-2017

Founding director. Using personal research funds initiated a special interest group that eventually was named the first of RAND's six "Methods Centers", paving the way for centers focused on causal inference, gaming, high-powered computing, and simulation modeling among others. Scheduled and hosted monthly internal and external speakers whose focus was applied network science. Provided trainings for professional staff as well as for junior and senior researchers. Provided research design consultation for RAND researchers. Forged connections among RAND networks researchers and RAND researchers interested in applying network science in their policy research. Facilitated grant proposals and contracts with a focus on networks.

Pardee Rand Graduate School 2011-2017

As a member of the PRGS core faculty and professor at PRGS, I mentor students as PhD chair or committee member; supervise independent studies on social network analysis, advanced statistical methods for network analysis, and multi-variable approaches for assessing structure in data; tutorials on social network analysis, and a course on social network analysis. (Susan Marquis, Dean PRGS)

Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research 2011-2015

As a summer instructor for ICPSR short courses, I taught lecture and labs on introductory and advanced social network analysis.

Social Research Solutions 2012-2015

As a consultant for Social Research Solutions, I taught courses on qualitative and quantitative research methods focusing on social network analysis and cognitive anthropology for agencies such as the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Consultant, RAND Corporation 2007

Performed exploratory multivariate analyses and initial social network analysis and visualization associated with the project 'Patterns of Terrorist Radicalization inside the United States'. Principal Investigators: Sara Daly and Kim Cragin

Consultant, BAE Systems 2007-2010

Human Terrain Team Training, Ft. Leavenworth Kansas. Mark Beatty, Primary POC
Provided training in qualitative and quantitative methods for Human Terrain Team members in preparation for their deployment into field situations in kinetic environments in Afghanistan and Iraq. Training focused on the basics of research design, qualitative and quantitative approaches to data collection and analysis, social network analysis and results presentation in the context of HTT-based problems.

Consultant, Amber-Light UK 2007-2008

Research design and statistical analysis consultant, London, UK. Ian Collingwood, Managing Director

Provided research design consultation for quantitative statistical comparisons of user experiences with electronics devices for clients such as Vodafone, Blackberry, etc. Provided analytic consultation for similar projects focused on determining key features for usability and primary differences between key markets. Also provided training to Amber-Light employees in research design for subsequent projects.

SONIC Research Group 2006-2007

Science of Networks in Communities Research Group, University of Illinois National Center for Supercomputing Applications. Dr. Noshir Contractor, director.

As a research scientist, participated in all aspects of project and proposal design, implementation, data collection and analysis. Projects focus on testing theories about the mechanisms of network formation, evolution and dynamics through computationally intensive statistical analyses and applying theoretical findings to develop tools (like the SNA-enabled recommender system, CI-KNOW) that enable collaboration within policy and research communities. Key collaborators are the CLEANER/WATERS project office and the National Cancer Institute.

TECLab 2005-2006

Team Engineering Collaboratory, University of Illinois Department of Speech Communication. Dr. Noshir Contractor, director.

As a postdoctoral research associate, participated in project and proposal design, community engagement, requirements gathering, data collection, implementation and analysis. Projects focused on creating Web-based tools that enable communities of practice to display, diagnose and design their collaborative relationships, and locate and share expertise and resources, based on data entered online by community members. Key collaborators are the 'Engaging People in CyberInfrastructure' Education, Outreach, and Training Project Team and the Rockefeller Foundation.

IKNOW, Inc. 2005-2007

Assisted Noshir Contractor in developing online tools for the collection, visualization and analysis of relational and knowledge networks within and among organizations. Tasks included developing survey questions, determining appropriate questionnaire layout, reporting progress to clients, managing the activities of computer programmers, and other tasks related to developing tools to assess the health of networks of up to 1200 nodes from both sociocentric and egocentric perspectives. Current clients include the Rockefeller Foundation Working Communities Group and Procter and Gamble.

Consultant, NeighborWorks America 2005
