NACCE has developed one of the most vibrant and robust entrepreneurial ecosystems in North America. In the past several years, the organization has grown substantially and taken a national leadership role in creating the entrepreneurial blueprint for higher education transformation.

With gratitude to Tallahassee Community College's President, Jim Murdaugh and Executive Vice President and Provost Vice President of Academic Affairs, Madeline Pumariaga, we are convening a select group of higher education, government, industry, and philanthropic leaders in Florida to ideate and create a new model for equity and workforce innovation. This work will lead the way for a national initiative focused on equity, diversity, student success, and economic prosperity.

We are pleased to welcome the authors and editors of Overcoming Educational Racism in the Community College: Creating Pathways to Success for Minority and Impoverished Student Populations and Community Colleges as Incubators of Innovation: Unleashing Entrepreneurial Opportunities for Communities and Students to this special event.
