Course Policies and Procedures: The following statement is included in each CAGS syllabus and refers to the information that will be located in the proposed course shell upon approval and subsequent development of the course:

Please carefully read the CAGS Course Policies and Procedures located in the Course Syllabus section of your course shell before you begin this course. You are responsible for understanding and following these policies whenever you participate in a CAGS Course.

To find the Course Development Handbook, please note that you can navigate the luke.ccu.edu webpage, click on the CCU Online (eCompanion) menu item. You will automatically be directed to the following link: <https://secure.ccu.edu/DigitalServicesAccount/CCUOnlineLogon.aspx> after you have logged in, click on the IDTInstructional Design Tutorial menu item under Special Courses.

The Integration of Faith, Learning and Living: An important part of your education here at CCU focuses on the integration of faith, learning, and living in relation to the content of each course. One of our goals is to examine course-related material from a Christian worldview. When appropriate, we will discuss legal, ethical, and moral implications relating to course-related topics as well as to our lives in general both while you are here at CCU and in your careers now and after graduation. The authors of our textbooks did not necessarily prepare the course materials based on a Christian worldview. Therefore, we must be aware of and sensitive to legal, ethical, moral, and worldview issues as they arise in class, in our online discussions, and in your written assignments.

In addition to the questions associated with each topic or case study, please be prepared each Week to respond to the following questions:

- Are there any moral or ethical issues raised in relation to this topic or case study? If so, what are they?

Revised 3.18.08

- How would you address such issues in real life?
- How does this issue or case correlate with a Christian worldview?
- Can you support your position with at least one biblical reference?

Course Outline and Schedule of Assignments: A Curricular Alignment Table (CAT) that outlines the course delivery and schedule of assignments will be created by the course developer once the course is approved. The course developer will be provided a CAT template from the CAGS curriculum development team at that time.

Special Accommodations: Please refer to the CCU online academic catalog for CCU's policies regarding special accommodations. It can be found at the following link: <http://www.ccu.edu/catalog/2007-08/cus/ldc.asp#Disabilities>
