"I've learned that meaningful allyship requires action, not just words. It demands listening, learning, and taking concrete steps. As leaders, we must champion inclusive practices, break down barriers, and challenge our own biases. The future of manufacturing depends on harnessing all available talent, and that starts with male leaders stepping up as committed allies. That's why I'm personally committed to this change, and why I believe other male leaders must join in this crucial effort."

"WiM attracts smart women who are eager to share their experiences working in manufacturing. It was great to meet so many of them at this conference and talk about supply chain, employee engagement, and sustainability. There was also a chance during the less formal parts of the conference to get real about some of our struggles in the workplace. Because of the size of the event, we were able to interact with the same people multiple times and build connections."
